

The Origin of KT's Woodkrafts

In 2015, we moved to a new house and met a man across the street who did wood working in his garage. He talked Kevin into purchasing a bandsaw. So, Kevin started looking for projects to make with his new toy. He found bandsaw jewelry boxes and decided to try his hand at a few. They turned out wonderful, so he built a bunch. At the point the house began to fill up and every family member had one, I urged him to try to sell them. He tried several different venues, but none were terribly successful.

We kept thinking that he should build something that was not only beautiful, but also utilitarian. So, when we purchased an end-grain cutting board from a good friend, we loved it so much that Kevin decided to try building a few, and that's when this really started to become a profitable venture. Once we were accepted at the Charleston City Night Market, it wasn't too long before Kevin was able to make it profitable enough to make it a full-time job.

It has been a wonderful journey up to now, and we look forward to where we are headed from this point forward. We are humbled by the reaction we have received and the appreciation our customers have for the items we make and sell. For us, it is a labor and love, and a blessing from God that so many people love the finished products enough to want to buy them.
